

Camille Rioux

Associate

Camille practises in the firm's Employment and Labour Law Group.

She advises public, para-public and private sector employers on issues related to human resources management and on developing good employment relations.

She also represents the same employers in litigious matters involving individual and collective employment relations before the civil courts and administrative tribunals, particularly grievance arbitration tribunals and the Administrative Labour Tribunal.

During her legal studies, she articulated for several administrative judges with the Commission des lésions professionnelles (now the Administrative Labour Tribunal). She also participated in the reform of the Jurist's Skills course (Habilités du juriste) at the Université de Montréal.

Camille joined the dynamic team of Lavery in 2020, after practising for a few years with another firm.
